SAN FRANCISCO, March 9 .- Two stories of mutiny and murder on the the dangerous wounding of the fourth mate, Joe Baptiste, by a sallor named Carl Hendryk. Six of the crew came up on the steamer, while thirteen are in frons at Honolulu.

on the steamer, while thirteen are in irons at Honolulu.

The other occurred on the American bark Hesper, which resulted in the death of the second mate, M. Fitzgeraid.

The Hesper reached Honolulu Feb. 22. The Captain brought information of a plot to kill him and four others, and their lives were only saved by the accidental discovery of the first murderous move on the part of the crew.

The plot was hatched by Thomas Leclair, a sailor, who shipped as a native of Norway, but it was afterwards learned that he was born in New York, Leclair's partners were Herman Sparf, Hans Hansen, Thomas Green and Edward Larsen.

They picked a dark night, and at about 19.30 o'clock Leclair murdered the second mate with a hatchet.

Sparf and Hansen wanted to throw the body overboard, and then remove all traces of the crime by washing up the bloodstains. Leclair would not consent to this, and immediately proposed that they go after the Captain and the other marked men and murder them also.

His companions weakened, and Leclair went at. The next day the Captain placed Leclair, Sparf and Hansen in Irons, and then changed his course and made for Tahaiti, which was reached after a voyage of fourteen days. The mutineers confessed their crime.
